Heading to the Swamp tomorrow morning after work. A couple of friends and I are driving over and spending a few days in the thick of it all. I hope to see all of you there! Let's do this for GEOTUS. WILL BE WILD! (media.patriots.win)

10 This isn't a rally, it's a (mostly peaceful) protest.

3 Ain't gonna jog far in those shoes. Needs some quality Timberland boots!

▼ Joking aside, those shoes have great ankle support and are built for court surfaces, but aren't designed for run or jog in. You're gonna damage your quality pepe knees and shins doing that. And get bloody scratches. ✓ 0

2 Gold Bond, perhaps? I thought California said Talcum powder gave me cancer. Listening to DiFi and Pelosi gives me cancer.

2 I forgot combat and cowboy boots. I forgot how comfortable a good pair of combat boots could be (though many reasons for that).

▼ The boot to beat those, though, used to be the Black Leather Aircrew Flying Boot. Not so great for crashing through the bush when on the ground (as if sir would deign to touch the filthy ground with his feet), but Oh so comfy. They weren't designed for ground combat (in fact there's a FOD issue with using combat boots as flying boots due to tread problems), but you could quite happily spend a 20+ hour work day wearing them and not even notice.

2 Aussie Pede recognises when the Air Forces do the right thing by their people.

▼ I was always told that the reason USAF bases were so much better equipped than USN / USMC / US Army bases was that the USAF spent their base building infrastructure funds on accommodation and support buildings first. Then went back to congress crying poor that they had no money to build runways and hangars to house their toys.

If you wanted a comfortable night sleep in the military, you had to seek out and somehow gain access to Air Force aircrew duty racks. Noise and light filtered. Climate controlled. Comfortable. Flushing toilets. Hot AND cold water. Not usually in a condemned building. Sure, precious prima donnas, but their whining often got the solutions they wanted, so it must have worked.

Same goes for their kit. When the Aussie ground forces realised the usefulness of combat gloves, the first couple of years there was a shortage of aircrew flying gloves in the supply world. Lovely soft leather and nomex with good dexterity which the dirteaters would cut the fingers off for better trigger control.

Many years back, the Aussie Air Force used to have a leather flying jacket not too dissimilar to the WWII jackets / what you saw in Top Gun but without the sewn on patches. It was one of the most sought after items for people to get and as a result most closely controlled by supply. At Most dutifully returned their jackets to supply, but a few had keyed in enough to ask what was going to happen to the jackets. In fine military tradition, they were to be destroyed. So, a few QMs and Q-stores were quietly asked if it was okay if people could hold onto the jacket. As it had already been struck off their card, it didn't exist, so the answer was "What jacket?".

When the Aussie Air Force reintroduced a Leather Jacket for uniform over a decade later, it was no longer an item of flying clothing, and it was a cheap and nasty thing compared to the beauty that had once been, of which very few examples remain hidden in wardrobes around the country.

We aren't a massive country of people, just of geography. If you keep your ear close enough to the ground, you'd be surprised what you just might pick up and discover what circles you already move in.

“ In this sentence: "If you keep your ear close enough to the ground, you'd be surprised what you just might pick up and discover what circles you already move in." What exactly were you getting at? I didn't pick up what you were throwing down.

Sheesh, it sounds like I was on all the drugs when I wrote that. The point that got lost between brain and fingers was that it doesn't always matter what our direct experiences are. If you listen to those around you, you might be surprised at what life experiences that they have to share. I was thinking as I wrote my other stuff just how many different people with really unique life stories I had managed to meet and listen to along the way.

As to the flying jackets, I don't think they were the fleecy collar types, To my understanding they were a leather collar like the rest of the jacket, but I could always ask and try and find out.

The re-issued jacket type is a modified US A-2 WWII design (<https://militaryshop.com.au/features/a2.html>) <-- this is apparently the current approved outerwear uniform variant.

The original flying kit item, I'm guessing, looked like an A-2 type design and I've heard they were a much more robust version than the current jackets.

New to this forum, but big supporter of President Donald Trump.

I can't go, but donated to a "Stop The Steal" site.

Starting tomorrow (Monday, the 4th) we need to completely burn up the capital switchboard. Please call as many times as you can (8AM - 6PM Eastern) through Wednesday, the 6th. Please encourage every supporter of Donald Trump and corruption free government to call.

If you ask for a written reply and engage the person in conversation about this election, you will make sure that the phone lines will be jammed.

We need to get across 3 main points:

1. The election was full of fraud and the evidence needs to be presented to the full Congress on January 6th.
2. The elected official needs to object to the fraudulent Biden electors and accept the valid Trump electors from the 7 swing states (AL, GA, MI, NM, NV, PA, & WI).
3. Accepting the fraudulent Biden electors is an act of treason, because of the thousands of instances of well-documented fraud, and should be punished with the penalties of treason.
